

ABSTRACT

Shaping data transmitted in a communication system includes determining whether to authorize transmission of received data having a variable size within a predetermined range. The determination is based on whether a predetermined amount of a time-based variable has substantially elapsed, the predetermined amount being related to a rate shaping criterion, and the determination is made without regard to the size of the received data.

40075811.doc